

ASCB AUTHORITY – INTERNATIONAL GUIDANCE

The authority under which Accreditation Service for Certifying Bodies LLC (ASCB) operates arises solely from the contractual relationship between ASCB and the organisations that engage its accreditation services.

ASCB operates independently of all governments and statutory authorities. It is not established, appointed, licensed, or endorsed by any national government, state agency, or intergovernmental organization, unless expressly stated in writing by ASCB. Accordingly, no statutory, legislative, or governmental authority is implied or claimed beyond that which ASCB holds under private commercial law.

ASCB-accredited organizations offer services to both public- and private-sector clients worldwide.

However, the legal and regulatory recognition of accreditation differs across countries and sectors. Therefore, it is the responsibility of every ASCB-accredited organization—and of their own clients or contracting authorities—to verify that ASCB accreditation is acceptable for its intended purpose and complies with any applicable local or national requirements.

ASCB recommends that all parties seek confirmation from the relevant regulatory or contracting bodies in the jurisdiction where services are to be delivered before relying on ASCB accreditation for statutory or procurement purposes.
